

Controlling Cell Behavior with Magnets

Monday, 21 January 2008

Controlling Cell Behavior with Magnets

'For the first time, researchers have demonstrated a means of controlling cell functions with a physical, rather than chemical, signal. Using a magnetic field to pull together tiny beads targeted to particular cell receptors, Harvard researchers made cells take up calcium, and then stop, then take it up again.'

Read more ...