Spy Bugs May be Deployed for 2012 Olympics

'British police are studying Chinese-style surveillance tactics as they prepare security for the 2012 London Olympics, a leaked Scotland Yard report has revealed. The report, marked "restricted", reveals that among the "Big Brother" tactics deployed at last summer's Beijing Games was the installation of miniature microphones in thousands of taxis.

The bugs transmitted passengers' conversations to a police control room. There, officers could activate disabling devices to stop the cabs if they suspected criminal activity. In another operation, athletes, visitors and journalists were believed to have been tracked by tiny microchips on their tickets and passes.'
