

Hearing is believing?

Saturday, 03 November 2007

Hearing is believing?

'In Shepard's Paradox, the starting pair of chords is in fact the same as the finishing pair, creating an auditory illusion that the pitch gets higher with each play. If you looped this sample seamlessly, it should be impossible to tell where the sample begins and where it ends.'

Read more ...