

The Fearless Mouse

Thursday, 08 November 2007

The Fearless Mouse

'A mouse brave enough - or foolish enough - to take on cats and other enemies may be the stuff of cartoons. But now, a real-life mouse has been developed that is so fearless it will take on even the scariest of foes. A 'switch' in the brain of mice which enables them to sense or smell danger has been discovered by scientists in Japan.'

Like I keep saying, the body is a computer.

Read more ...